Introduction.

EARLY PRESS LAWS.

THE censorship of books has existed from the earliest times, among the heathens and Jews as well as Christians. Everywhere books deemed dangerous to religion or morals were publicly burnt, and perhaps the earliest result of Christian censorship is to be found in the canon of Holy Scripture itself, from which numerous Books have been excluded on the ground that they are not genuine. In 325 the First Council of Nicea not only condemned Arius, but also his book "Thalia," and Constantine ordered that the writings of Arius and his friends should be burnt. Popes and Councils throughout the Middle Ages continued to prohibit books, until the time when the invention of printing and resulting multiplication of copies called for preventive as well as remedial measures. These seem to have been put into force in the first instance at Cologne; but, on May 3, 1515, Pope Leo X. promulgated his Bull "Inter sollicitudines"—the first censorial Decree given for the whole Church. By this, all writings without exception were to be submitted for censorship before being printed. After examination, approbation was to be given, free of charge and without delay, under pain of excommunication. Thus, the ecclesiastical censorship of books began before the Reformation and, as is well known, it continues to the present day.

The only change brought about by the Reformation in the censorship of books was that new censors and licensers were substituted for the old ones and that an orgy of partisan licensing began. Books written by one side were destroyed by the other and their writers and printers punished whenever caught. To the disputes between Protestants and Catholics were soon added disputes between the Protestant sects; and, as far as England is concerned, the first formal code of regulations for licensers and printers was drawn up by the Elizabethan Archbishop Whitgift, in order to silence his Puritan opponents. These rules, Strype tells us, were "set forth by the authority of the Star Chamber, June 23, anno 28 Elizab. (1585), together with a Preface, which appears by the writing (being the hand of one of his secretaries) to have been also made by the Archbishop. By which Preface it is evident that this matter was taken in hand (viz., that rules should be appointed for printing) by the Queen's Special order."

At the time when these rules were first drawn up there were in London twenty-one printers, who owned fifty-three printing-presses in all, and, in addition, there was one press at Oxford and another at Cambridge (1). Thus the whole kingdom contained but fifty-five printing-presses, owned by no more than twenty-three printers.

Yet the rules had in view the reduction of the number of presses, printers and printers' apprentices. No more presses were to be set up without the permission of the Archbishop and the Bishop of London for the time being. No one was to print anything unless it was licensed by the same authorities. Printers, binders, and vendors alike were to be imprisoned for offences against the rules, presses were to be destroyed, and unlicensed books confiscated wherever found by the Stationers' Company, to whom the execution of these rules was entrusted. The Wardens of the Stationers' Company had unlimited powers of search and seizure conferred upon them ; they could break open doors, deface type, and saw in pieces illicit presses. Finally, the printers at the two Universities were not "to have any moe apprentices then one at one tyme at the most," though it was lawful for them to have help from "journeymen, being citizens of the City of London." It is thus abundantly evident that "printing, like coining," was "one of the regalia of Government" ; an art which needed to be jealously guarded and was only to be carried on under the eyes of authority.

But a printing-press in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries was not the complicated machine known to us nowadays. It was easily put together and could be removed from place to place without much difficulty. Type, too, was secretly imported from the Continent ; and thus, in spite of the restrictions imposed by the rules upon the typefounders, a great deal of surreptitious printing followed the promulgation of the Decrees of the Star Chamber—the "Martin Marprelate" tracts soon bore witness to this during the life of Whitgift himself.

In their final form the rules of the Star Chamber seem to have been again set forth on June 23 of the following year, 1586 (2), but the rules do not seem to have been printed, and this, no doubt, accounts for the fact that in modern times attention has been diverted to the better known but relatively unimportant Star Chamber Decree of 1637 (to be discussed later on). It is natural to consider all these Decrees tyrannical ; but it should be remembered that Luther and Melanchthon had set in force the same kind of legislation in Germany against other Protestant sects (3), and that it was not so much licensing itself that was objected to as the persons of the licensers—the bishops who by themselves or their deputies were attempting to stamp out the propaganda of a large and growing Puritan minority. Another fact too frequently forgotten is the question of copyright. An author or publisher had no protection unless a book or pamphlet was first "seen" "allowed" and entered into the Stationers' Registers—for copyright at Common Law was doubtful until the famous case of Donaldson v. Becket, in 1774. The privilege granted by the exercise of the Royal Prerogative, therefore, was not one to be despised.

The Royal Prerogative in the publication of news, however, stood on an even narrower footing. It was the unanimous opinion of the Judges given to Charles II. in 1680 ("London Gazette" for May 3-6, 1680), at a time when there was no Act of Parliament in force controlling printing, that the King might of his own authority prohibit all printing of news as tending to a breach of the peace. Nothing corresponding to a modern newspaper, therefore, was published until long after the introduction of printing.

THE ORIGIN OF NEWSPAPERS.

To define a word is to limit its meaning, and to define the word "news" is a task best left to the lexicographers, with the comment that few of their definitions are satisfactory to the historians of journalism. And perhaps the best description of the "news" found in a newspaper was that of Steele, prefixed by him to the "Tatler" by way of motto : "Quicquid agunt homines, nostri farrago libelli" ; or, as he paraphrased it, "I shall take anything that offers for the subject of my discourse." With the word "newspaper" however, we are upon safer ground. A newspaper is a printed periodical "paper" of news as opposed to a pamphlet or book. In this sense the word newspaper did not come into use before 1670, for the earlier periodicals of news were all termed, first, "corantos," and then, "news-books" (pamphlets), and the first printed paper (with a few exceptions) was the "Oxford Gazette" of 1665, half a sheet in folio, and therefore not to be described as a book or pamphlet.

But corantos, newsbooks and newspapers alike were the outcome of the invention of printing, and there does not seem to have been anything

(3) The best account of the censorship is that given in Johannes Janssen's monumental "History of the German People at the close of the Middle Ages." Translation by A. M. Christie (1909). Vol. 14. Chap. 11 : "Book censorship—printing and bookselling—newspapers."

exactly corresponding to them in ancient times. The "Acta Diurna" of the Romans (4) present considerable analogy to a modern newspaper; but, unfortunately, supposed copies of them are all forgeries, so that we have very little knowledge of their contents (5).

Next to the "Acta" of the Romans, followed a journal commenced at Pekin, it is said, in the sixth century. Information about this periodical is scanty and unsatisfactory.

Our knowledge of the early European periodicals has been limited by the facts that few have survived and that a good deal of research on the subject has yet to be carried out. The first German "Zeitungen" (6) appeared in the middle of the sixteenth century, but the only German periodical known in England was a book published half yearly, first at Cologne and later at Frankfurt, written in Latin, and entitled "Mercurius Gallobelgicus." The first number of this periodical appeared in 1594 (7). Its first author was a Dutch priest who signs his name, "M. Jansen of Doccum in Friesland." He is termed by the Germans Michael ab Isselt. A remembrance of this periodical's circulation in England has been preserved for us by Dr. Donne, in one of his Epigrams:—

MERCURIUS GALLO-BELGICUS.

Like Esop's fellow slaves, O Mercury
Which could do all things, thy faith is; and I
Like Esop's self, which nothing; I confess
I should have had more faith, if thou had'st less;
Thy credit lost thy credit; 'tis a sin to do,
In this case, as thou would'st be done unto,
To believe all; change thy name; thou art like
Mercury in stealing; but liest like a Greek.

"Mercurius Gallobelgicus" was followed in France, in 1611, by "Le Mercure François," similar in nearly every respect, a periodical lasting at least until 1648 (8).

The next stage in the development of the newspaper on the Continent took the form of periodical "papers" printed in Holland. These were the Dutch "courants" (i.e., running relations not confined to one number). The earliest surviving numbers appear to be three copies in the British Museum, for November 22 and 25, 1619, and February 12, 1621. They were not numbered. But the Dutch courants are known to have existed since the year 1607 at least, for in that year the Dutch East India Company forbade anyone to remove any courant out of their offices on penalty of a fine of three guilders; and there is another entry referring to them on April 11, 1616. There can be little doubt that these Dutch courants circulated in England, owing to the English expeditions to the Low Countries at that time.

Lastly, a formidable adversary to the courants sprang up in the shape of "gazettes," or quarto pamphlets without any regular running title or "catch-

(4) They were also termed "Diurna," "Acta Publica," "Acta Urbana," or simply "Acta." See more of them in Tacitus, Annals III, 3; xiii, 31; xvi, 22; Cicero. Epistles, II. 8; and Juvenal, Satires, II. 136.

(5) A passage in Petronius Arbiter (Cena Trimalchionis, c. 53) gives a parody:—"But his (Trimalchio's) secretary checked this whim, for he recited, just as from the "Acta" of the City, 'On the 26th of July, 30 boys and 40 girls were born on Trimalchio's estate at Cumae. At the same time 500,000 bushels of wheat were carried to the barns from the thrashing floors. Five hundred oxen were broken in. On the same day the slave Mithridates was crucified because he had cursed the genius of our master Gaius. On the same day one hundred thousand sesterces, which could not be put out to advantage, were placed in the treasury. On the same day there was a fire in the grounds of Pompeii, which broke out in the house of Nasta, the bailiff, &c.'"

(6) The first known document bearing the title "Zeitung" is the "Copia der neuen Zeitung aus Presily Land," in the Munich Court Library, to which the conjectural date of 1508 has been assigned.

(7) The subsequent numbers adopted the plural and styled themselves "Mercurii Gallobelgici." The full title of the first number ran as follows:—Mercurius Gallobelgicus, sive Rerum in Gallia et Belgio potissimum, Hispania quoque, Italia, Anglia, Germania, Polonia, vicinisque locis ab anno 1588 usque ad Martium anni præsentis 1594 gestarum Nuncius. Opusculum in sex libros, qui totidem annos complectuntur divisum, auctore D. M. Iansonio Doccomensi Frisio. Editio altera ab infinitis mendis repurgata, plurimis per singulos libros historiis aucta, & huc usq. continuata. Coloniæ Agrippinæ, Apud Godefridum Kempensem, Anne MDXCLV. (Tom 4, auctore G. Lorchano; tom 5-13 G. Arthus; tom 17-18 J. P. Abelino.) The last number at the British Museum is dated 1630. Michael ab Isselt was born at Amersfoort in the Diocese of Utrecht, where his father was a surgeon, between 1530 and 1540, studied theology at Liège, became priest at Amersfoort, afterwards at Cologne, and died at Hamburg Oct. 17, 1597. He wrote several books.

(8) After an ornamental title-page, the second title page runs:—"Le Mercure François; ou, La suitte de l'histoire de la Paix. Commençant l'an MDCV pour suitte de septenaire du D. Cayer, et finissant au sacre du Très Chrestien Roy de France et de Navarre Loys XIII. A Paris. Par Iean Richer, rue S. Jean de Latran, à l'Arbre verdoyant, & en sa boutique au Palais sur le Perron Royal, vis-à-vis de la Gallerie des prisonniers MDCXI. Avec Privilège du Roy."

word." issued at Antwerp by Abraham Verhoeven, to whom a patent giving him the exclusive privilege of publishing news is said to have been granted in 1605, though he himself continually prints one dated January 28, 1620.

Woodcuts abound in these Flemish periodicals, mingled with verse and satire of all kinds, and they were licensed by the Archdeacons of Antwerp for the time being (9).

THE FIRST ENGLISH NEWSPAPERS.

Although no regular periodical was issued in England until long after the introduction of printing, the beginnings of journalism can be traced very far back. Great men retained "intelligencers" to keep them informed of the politics of Europe as well as of home affairs, and these intelligencers were invariably well educated and observant men, whose letters are nowadays amongst the most valuable of our historical records. Three of these intelligencers are of importance in the history of English journalism—John Chamberlain (10), intelligencer to Dudley Carleton, Viscount Dorchester and Ambassador at The Hague, his contemporary, John Pory (11), and Thomas Locke, who was also Carleton's steward.

The intelligencers may be considered the forerunners of the higher and better side of journalism; and it is well worth remark that the profession of a newsletter writer, as distinct from that of a writer of printed news, persisted until near the close of the eighteenth century, long after both censorship and licensing had been abolished. No better proof can be brought forward of the jealousy and suspicion with which our rulers have always regarded the newspaper Press than the concurrent existence of newsletters, although it is fair to add that Continental restrictions upon the Press were followed by a similar increase of "newsletters" and newsletter writers. The jealousy with which the printing-presses were watched is proved by the execution of a printer called Mathews as late as 1719. Mathews had printed "Vox populi, vox Dei." From the copies at the Record Office this seems to have been a pamphlet first issued in 1709, and even attributed to Lord Somers in recent years. Nevertheless, Mathews would not disclose the name of the author, so he was duly hanged, drawn, and quartered at Tyburn on November 6, 1719.

But for the common people, in the early days of printing, the ballads stuck over an alehouse chimney-piece, or the non-periodical pamphlets giving accounts of some battle or tragic event were the forerunners of the newspaper. The ballads recorded most of the events of their time:—"The death of a great man or the burning of a house" furnished the ballad-maker "with an argument," wrote Bishop Earle in his "Micro-Cosmographie," in 1628, "and the nine Muses are set strait in mourning, and Melpomene cries 'Fire! Fire!'" And, as for the non-periodical pamphlets (usually termed "relations"), a proclamation issued in the thirty-sixth year of the reign of Henry VIII. ordered "certain bookes printed of newes of the prosperous successes of the King's Ma'ties arms in Scotland" to be brought in and burnt within twenty-four hours; so that it is evident that relations soon followed the printing-press into England.

In the Royal Library at The Hague one of the earliest of these relations is preserved. It is entitled:—

Certein letters, wherein is set forth a Discourse of the Peace that was attempted to have bin put in effecte by the Lords and States of Hollande and Zelande in . . . 1574. Also a supplication put up by the saide States of Hollande and Zelande and other places of the Low Countreys to the king; together with the aunswere and a Reply uppon the same, and divers other particularities. Imprinted at London by Thomas Marshe, anno 1576.

Again, in 1594: "The aunswere of the Lords the Estates Generall of the

(9) The "imprimatur" usually runs "V.C.D.W.A." i.e., Vidit Carolus de Witt, Archidiaconus. The British Museum collection extends from Jan. 17, 1619, to June 22, 1622.

(10) John Chamberlain (1553-1627), educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, is described in the Dictionary of National Biography as "the Horace Walpole of his day," and "an accomplished scholar and an admirable letter writer."

(11) John Pory (1570-1635) educated at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge (M.A., 1595) was also a traveller and geographer, became M.P. for Bridgewater on Nov. 5, 1605, and settled finally in London in 1624. See more of him in the Dictionary of National Biography.

United Provinces of the Lowe-Countries to the letter of the Archduke of Austria . . . also the extract of certain letters written out of the Campe before Groning," was "Printed first at Middelburgh by Rich. Schilders" and in London "by John Wolfe," and proves that Dutch and English publishers were working together at this time. The presence of English forces in Holland strengthened the connexion, and, in 1597, "A True Discourse of the ouerthrowe given the Common Enemy at Turnhaut, the 14 of January last, 1597," was stated to be "Sent from a Gentleman of account, that was present at the seruice, to a friend of his in England," and "Printed by Peter Short." Translations from the Dutch naturally followed; and, by the time when the books of "Gallobelgicus," and the "Mercure François," Abraham Verhoeven's gazettes (as we must term them, for want of a better word), and, most important of all, the Dutch courants had begun to circulate in England, the question of an English periodical was soon discussed.

There exists among the State Papers of the second decade of the seventeenth century an undated and unsigned Memorandum of a petition on the subject. The handwriting appears to be that of Thos. Locke and the document itself was probably a draft sent by him to Carleton (12). Locke says that "My suit is that your lordship would give me leave to be a suitor to the King (James I.) that Mr. Pory and myself may procure a patent to be the overseers of all books of humanity (i.e. history) which shall be printed, that he will give unto us a fee of £20 per annum, to each of us for our pains, and with all give us leave to print the gazetts or weekly occurrents which we shall get from other parts, that none may print them without our licence. And for this we will give his Majesty as much rent as he shall give us for perusing books, or £20 a year more, so that we may have a patent of this to us or our assigns." Locke gave reasons why the latter part of his request should be granted :—

Amongst the policies of government which may be accounted in the number of "arcana imperii" there are some not of the meanest, said he.

(i.) To settle a way that when there shall be any revolt or backsliding in matter of religion or obedience (which commonly grows upon rumours among the vulgar) to draw them in by the same lines that drew them out, by spreading amongst them such reports as may best make for that matter to which we would have them drawn.

(ii.) To establish a speedy and ready way whereby to disperse into the veins of the whole body of a State such matter as may best temper it, and be most agreeable to the disposition of the Head and the principal members upon all occasions that shall be offered.

(iii.) To devise means to raise the spirits of the people and to quicken their conceits and understanding by giving them tastes of matters clear from the common mire of worldliness. It makes such apt to be drawn from the cold sodish humour of sloth, (and) extends the sense by degrees to the conceit of the right rules of reason, whereby they are wrought easily to obey those which by these rules shall command them.

The examples given of all this and the terminology employed should be of interest to the historians of journalism in other countries. For, added he :—

Of this ancient times afford many precedents; and, for modern, we see these to be the causes sending these gazetts weekly as from the centre of newes, to disperse all accounts to all parts of the world.

This sells "Mercurius Gallobelgicus" now in Germany, the Advisoes in France, and the Novellas in Italy and Spain. In which point no country is so heavy as our Britain, which I have heard reproved in foreign parts for the negligence herein. From Antwerp, Brussels, Hague, Cologne, Frankfort, Prague, Vienna, Gratz, Venice, Florence, Rome, Naples, Genoa, Spain, Paris and Lyons we have the occurrents every week in all places of the world; yea, even here amongst us in England.

Carleton probably sent this Memorandum on to the Secretary of State. Nothing, however, seems to have been done, in spite of the inducements offered to the King.

Soon, however, events happened which rendered Continental news of the keenest possible interest to the English nation in general, and to the extremely strong Presbyterian party in the Church of England in particular. In 1613, the King's daughter, Elizabeth, had married Frederick, the Elector Palatine of the Rhine, commonly called the Palsgrave in England. In August, 1619, Frederick accepted the Throne of Bohemia "as a Divine call," and in defiance of the rights of the Emperor. Thus it became quite possible that either Frederick or his successor might become the first Protestant Emperor; with the result that the extirpation of Catholicism would be well in sight, for Frederick was a strong Calvinist, whose chaplain was the celebrated Scultetus (13), well known in England. To the admiring Puritans, the new Queen of Bohemia at once became the "Queen of Hearts," and when it became known, towards the close of the year 1620, that the army of the Catholic League, under Maximilian, Duke of Bavaria, Tilly, and Bucquoi, was on its way to drive the Palsgrave out of his capital of Prague, interest and anxiety grew feverish among all classes. The battle of the "White Mountain"—or, as it was termed in England, the "Weissenberg"—followed (14) and, in one hour, the "Winter King," as the Imperialists nicknamed him (in allusion to the custom of children to choose a King and Queen on Twelfth Night) lost not only the Throne he had held for over a year, but also the whole of his dominions, and became an exile. Thus, the "Weissenberg" was the first decisive battle of the Thirty Years' War. It was "fearful news," wrote James Howell.

The time was ripe for the publication of an English periodical; and a Dutch printer at Amsterdam seized the opportunity. Peter van den Keere, or, Peter of the Turn, who carried on business "at the sign of the watch that turns" (in the wind) or, as he put it, "in the uncertaine time," printed a half-sheet in-folio, in English, containing reports about the battle of the "Weissenberg," and thus the first English newspaper came into being. The battle had been fought on November 8, but it was not until December 2, 1620, that the document which, in all probability, may have been the first number of the first English newspaper saw the light. There is no heading or title of any kind on this first number. We have one direct statement proving that the first newspaper began about this time, for John Chamberlain, writing to Carleton, on February 16, 1622, said:—

> The uncertainty likewise and variety of reports is such that we know not what to believe of that done under our nose; and what is given out to-day for certain is to-morrow contradicted. For, since two years that forge, or mint, was set up at Amsterdam we have never left off coining, so apish are we in imitation of what is worst.

Two years back from 1622 refers us to 1620, when this first known coranto was printed.

Again, the poet and satirist, John Cleiveland, in his "Character of a London Diurnall," first printed in January, 1645, wrote that:—

> The original sinner in this kind was Dutch, Gallo-Belgicus the Protoplast and the modern mercuries but Hans-en-Kelders (unborn children). The Countess of Zealand was brought to bed of an almanac; as many children as days in the year.

Finally, on Dec. 24, 1620, James I issued a proclamation "against excesse of Lavish and Licentious Speech of matters of State." Although this did not specify the corantos, it nevertheless was really aimed at them, for when (on July 26, 1621) this proclamation was reissued, Chamberlain wrote to Carleton (on August 4, 1621) that:—

> There is come out a new proclamation against lavish and licentious talking in matters of State either at home or abroad, which the common people know not how to understand, nor how far matters of State may stretch or extend, for they continue to take no notice of it, but print every week, at least, corantos with all manner of news, and as strange stuff as any we have from Amsterdam.

This is Chamberlain's first notice of the corantos.

James I even called to his aid the services of his Ambassador at The Hague,

(13) Abraham Scultetus, or Schultz, born Aug. 24, 1566, at Grunberg in Schleswig, died Oct. 24, 1624, at Emden. He baptized Prince Rupert at Prague.

(14) On Sunday, Nov. 8, 1620. The Weissenberg is a hill, 1,245 ft. high, three and a half miles to the east of Prague. Christian of Anhalt commanded the Bohemians, whose King was away in Prague entertaining James I.'s Ambassadors at dinner. The hero and moving spirit on the Catholic side was the Carmelite monk, Father Dominic, Duke Maximilian's chaplain, to whose prayers the victory is ascribed. Dominic Ruzzola was born at Calatayud, Spain, on May 16, 1559, became General of his Order in 1617, and died at Vienna on Feb. 13, 1630. See the "Leben und wirken des Dieners Gottes, Dominikus à Jesu Maria," by Bonifacius Muller. Very full accounts of the battle, including that of the English Ambassador, are to be seen in Anton Gindely's "Berichte über die Schlacht auf dem Weissen Berge," in the "Archiv für Osterreichische Geschichte," Band XV. See also the "Mercure François," Tome 6, "Mercurius Gallobelgicus," the Antwerp "Gazettes" &c. The English corantos contain a few brief notes, and some curious passages about the Carmelite, Father Dominic.

Dudley Carleton, so eager was he to check all criticisms of his own failure to support his son-in-law, the Palsgrave.

On Jan. 16, 1621, a proclamation of the States General of Holland (15) was issued, reciting that there had been secret and public printing of "certain booklets, pamphlets and writings" in the "Latin, French, English, Scottish and various other languages, both on ecclesiastical and political matters, touching persons and governments of Kings, Princes, friends and allies" of Holland. The Dutch, therefore, were forbidden "to send the same to other countries and realms and particularly not to send some twelve scandalous writings and pamphlets concerning other Kings and potentates, friends and allies, touching their political or ecclesiastical governments, and especially also none against the King of Great Britain and his principal ministers, spiritual and temporal." James I, therefore, cannot have regarded the first newspaper with a friendly eye.

The precise date upon which these English "corantos" were first reprinted in England has not been ascertained; but it seems probable that this happened soon after their commencement, for we know that Thomas Archer, of Pope's Head Alley, Cornhill, was imprisoned in Sept., 1621, "for making or adding to his corantos." Thomas Archer, therefore, was the first Englishman to publish an English newspaper (16). Archer was followed by Nicholas Bourne, in the same year; and, in 1622, Nathaniel Butter, whose name has been the subject of puns innumerable, and who has been immortalized by Ben Jonson in his "Staple of Newes," first entered the field as a publisher of corantos. Butter, like many others, had for sometime past been publishing the isolated pamphlets of news, termed "relations," but henceforward became the chief vendor of corantos. Other stationers joined the first three, in and after 1622, and the resulting weekly pamphlet appears to have been published by them all indiscriminately, and without competition, judging from the imprints to be found upon the numbered series still in existence. Eventually, however, there was a partnership between Butter and Bourne, and the two became sole purveyors of news up to the time of the Great Rebellion.

"Natura nihil facit per saltum," so that the corantos were not numbered until 1622 and never at any time had a "catchword" or newspaper title. They were simply called the "coranto," and the title prefixed to each number was a synopsis of its contents, as wordy as the titles prefixed to bound volumes at that time.

Only foreign news was printed down to 1641, for the corantos dealt almost exclusively with the Thirty Years' War.

Ben Jonson has left us a satirically imaginative picture of a newswriter of the times and of his offices, and it can hardly be said to have been drawn from the life. But there is a better picture of an early editor to be found in one of the seventeenth century books of "characters." The "character" was a recognized literary form of the times and, though it was always satirical in form, it did not stray far from the facts. The forgotten poet, Richard Brathwaite, published a book of "Characters" in 1631, and thus describes the editor of that period:—

"A CORRANTO-COINER."

A coranto-coiner is a State newesmonger; and his owne genius is his intelligencer. His mint goes weekly and he coins monie by it. Howsoever the more intelligent merchants doe jeere him, the vulgar doe admire him, holding his novels oracular; and these are usually sent for tokens or intermissive curtsies betwixt city and countrey. Hee holds most constantly one forme or method of discourse. He retaines some military words of Art, which hee shootes at randome; no matter where they hitt, they cannot wound any. He ever leaves some passages doubtfull, as if they were some more intimate secrecies of State, closing his sentence abruptly with— hereafter you shall heare more. Which words, I conceive, hee only useth as baites, to make the appetite of the reader more eager in his next week's pursuit for a more satisfying labour. Some generall-erring relations he pickes up as crummes or fragments, from a frequented ordinarie; of which shreads he shapes a coat to fit any credulous foole that will wear it. You shall never observe him make any reply in places of public concourse; hee ingenuously acknowledges himselfe to bee more bounden to the happinesse of a retentive memory, than eyther ability of tongue, or pregnancy of conceite. He carries his table-booke (17) still about with him, but does not pull it out publicly. Yet no sooner is the table drawne than he turnes notarie; by which meanes hee recovers the charge of his ordinarie. Paules (18) is his walke in winter; Moorfields in summer. Where the whole discipline, designes, projects, and exploits of the States, Netherlands, Poland, Switzer, Crimchana and all, are within the compass of one quadrangle walke most judiciously and punctually discovered. But long he must not walke, lest he make his newes presse stand. Thanks to his good invention he can collect much out of a very little; no matter though more experienced judgments disprove him; hee is anonymous and that will secure him. To make his reports more credible; or, (which hee and his stationer only aymes at) more vendible, in the relation of every occurrent hee renders you the day of the moneth; and to approve himself a scholler, he annexeth these Latin parcells, or parcell-gilt sentences, "veteri stylo," "novi stylo." Palisados parapets, counterscarfes, forts, fortresses, rampiers, bulwarks, are his usual dialect. Hee writes as if hee would doe some mischiefe, yet the charge of his shot is but paper. Hee will sometimes start in his sleepe, as one affrighted with visions, which I can impute to no other cause but to the terrible skirmishes which hee discoursed of in the daytime. Hee has now tyed himself apprentice to the trade of minting, and must weekly perform his taske, or (besides the loss which accrues to himselfe) he disappoints a number of no small fooles, whose discourse, discipline and discretion, is drilled from his state-service. These you shall know by their Monday's morning question, a little before Exchange time; "Stationer, have you any newes?" Which they no sooner purchase than peruse; and, early next morning (lest their countrey friend should be deprived of so rich a prize) they freely vent the substance of it, with some illustrations, if their understanding can furnish them that way. Hee would make you beleeve that hee were knowne to some forcine intelligencer, but I hold him the wisest man that hath the least faith to beleeve him. For his relations he stands resolute, whether they become approved, or evinced for untruths; which if they bee, hee has contracted with his face never to blush for the matter. Hee holds especially concurrence with two philosophicall sects, though hee bee ignorant of the tenets of either; in the collection of his observations he is peripateticall, for hee walkes circularly; in the digestion of his relations hee is Stoicall, and sits regularly. Hee has an alphabeticall table of all the chief commanders, generals, leaders, provinciall townes, rivers, ports, creekes, with other fitting materials to furnish his imaginary building. Whisperings, muttrings, and bare suppositions, are sufficient grounds for the authoritie of his relations. It is strange to see with what greedinesse this ayrie Chameleon, being all lungs and winde, will swallow a receit of newes, as if it were physicall: yea, with what frontlesse insinuation he will scrue himselfe into the acquaintance of some knowing Intelligencers, who, trying the cask by the hollow sound, do familiarly gull him. I am of opinion, were all his voluminous centuries of fabulous relations compiled, they would vye in number with the Iliads of many forerunning ages. You shall many times find in his Gazettas, pasquils and corrantos miserable distractions; here a city taken by force long before it bee besieged; there a countrey laid waste before ever the enemie entered. He many times tortures his readers with impertinencies, yet these are the tolerablest passages throughout all his discourse. He is the very landskip of our age. He is all ayre, his eare alwayes open to all reports, which, how incredible soever, must passe for currant, and find vent, purposely to get him currant money, and delude the vulgar. Yet our best comfort is his chymeras live not long; a weeke is the longest in the citie, and after their arrival, a little longer in the countrey; which past, they melt like Butler, or match a pipe, and so Burne. But, indeede, most commonly it is the height of their ambition to aspire to the imployment of stopping mustard pots, or wrapping up pepper, pouder, staves-aker (19), &c., which done, they expire. Now for his habit, Wapping and Long Lane will give him his character. Hee honours nothing with a more indeered observance, nor hugges ought with more intimacie than antiquitie, which he expresseth even in his cloathes. I have knowne some love fish best that smelled of the panyer; and the like humour reignes in him, for hee loves that apparell best that has a taste of the broker. Some have held him for a Scholler, but, trust mee, such are in a palpable error, for hee never yet understood so much Latine as to construe "Gallo-Belgicus." For his librarie (his owne continuations excepted) it consists of very few or no bookes. He holds himself highly engaged to his invention if it can purchase him victuals; for authors, hee never converseth with them, unlesse they walke in Paules. For his discourse it is ordinarie, yet hee will make you a terrible repetition of desperate commanders, unheard of exployts; intermixing withall his owne personall service. But this is not in all companies, for his experience hath sufficiently informed him in this principle—that as nothing works more on the simple than things strange and incredibly rare; so nothing discovers his weakness more among the knowing and judicious than to insist, by way of discourse, on reports above conceite. Amongst these, therefore, hee is as mute as a fish. But now imagine his lampe (if he be worth one) to be neerely burnt out; his inventing genius wearied and surfoote with raunging over so many unknowne regions; and himself, wasted with the fruitless expenes of so much paper, resigning his place of weekly collections to another, whom in hope of some little share, hee has to his stationer recommended, while hee lives either poorly respected, or dyes miserably suspended. The rest I end with his own cloze, "Next week you shall heare more" (20).

(16) Thomas Archer is known from his imprints from 1603 to 1634. His earlier addresses were (a) "The little shop by the Royal Exchange" and (b) "The long shop under St. Mildred's Church" (1604). He was apprenticed to Cuthbert Burby, who made him free of the Stationers' Company on Jan. 15, 1603. Archer appears to have been "Mercurius Britannicus."

(20) "Whimzies: or, a new Cast of Characters. 'Nova, non nota, delectant.'" London, 1631. (Dedicated to Sir Alexander Radcliffe, and signed, "Clitus-Alexandrinus.")

In 1632 the corantos were suppressed, but, six years later on, Butter and Bourne received the sole privilege of printing them and recommenced their foreign news. Finally, on July 11, 1637, the Star Chamber issued its final Decree on printing. The rules laid down by it did not greatly extend those compiled by Archbishop Whitgift and proceeded on the same lines. Law books and works on heraldry, &c., were to be licensed by the proper authorities, but the Archbishop and Bishop of London for the time being still retained control. The printer and author were to set their names to every book, and no books were to be printed abroad. "As formerly, so now" said the 15th rule, "there shall be but twentie master Printers," specifying those by name who were authorized. The last rule of all wisely ordered a copy of every book to be reserved for the Bodleian Library, at Oxford.

It is probable that this Decree was almost inoperative, or only operative for about two or three years, for the imprints on books and pamphlets of the time prove that a large number of publishers other than the twenty printers specified were in existence. And as from August 1, 1641, the Star Chamber was abolished by Act of Parliament, so that all the Decrees were then abrogated.

THE NEWSBOOKS.

The corantos vanished amid the crowd of diurnals printed in 1642, and catchwords, or newspaper titles, first began to appear in that year, owing to competition between different publishers of the proceedings of Parliament and other domestic news. They were not always very honest journals, but the principal newsbook of the time, the "Perfect Diurnall," appears to have been licensed by Henry Elsing, the Clerk of the Parliament. This periodical assumed its final form in 1643, and was described by Alexander Brome as :—

A New Diurnal of passages more
Exactly drawn up than heretofore
Printed and published 'tis ordered to be
By Henry Elsing, the Clerk of the P.
June 1, 1643.

Since many diurnals, for which we are grieved
Are come from both houses, and are not believed
The better to help them for running and flying
We have put them in verse, t'authorise their lying
For it has been debated, and found to be true
That lying's a parliament privilege too.

Brome then went on to give a satirical account in verse of each day's proceedings in Parliament during a week.

Finally, in the same month of June, 1643, Parliament set up a Board of Licensers, newspaper titles were recognized, and order restored among the crowd of diurnals. "Anyone may write a newsbook, but he must not infringe another writer's title" seems to have been the rule. As a result at least one different newsbook appeared on each day of the week.

Three or four years later on a satirist wrote of the newsbooks :—

Pamphlets are the weekly Almanacks shewing what weather is in the state, which, like the doves of Aleppo, carry news to every part of the Kingdom. They are the silent traytors that affront Majesty, and abuse all authority, under the colour of an "imprimatur." Ubiquitary flies that have of late so blistered the ears of all men, that they cannot endure any solid truth. The echoes whereby what is done in part of the kingdom is heard all over. They are like mushrooms, sprung up in a night, and dead in a day; and such is the greediness of men's natures (in these Athenian days) of news, that they will rather feign than want it (21).

Other than "Mercurius Aulicus" and two or three later periodicals published at Oxford, no Royalist Press was in existence until 1647. In the autumn of that year a crowd of mercuries, all unlicensed, all Royalist or Presbyterian-Royalist began to appear, the absence of a printer's or publisher's name pointing to their origin. Parliament passed an Ordinance (i.e., an Act wanting the King's Assent) meting out severe penalties to writers and printers of unlicensed prints—but all to no effect; for the mercuries increased in number. When the Army occupied London at the end of 1648 Fairfax issued a Warrant ordering all the

"Orders and Ordinances" of the Long Parliament to be put in force by his Provost Marshal. This Warrant is of especial importance because, commencing with the Long Parliament's Order of March 9, 1642, it sets out in full the whole of the Parliamentary legislation in existence at the time.

Orders, Ordinances, and Warrants alike all failed to suppress an unlicensed Press which could count on the support, active or passive, of three-fourths of the nation, so that an Act of the Rump of September 20, 1649, doubled all the fines, &c. imposed by the Ordinance of 1647. This Act was remarkable for two things—first, because it specified three persons who were to license the pamphlets of news (and nothing else); and secondly, because the whole of the licensed Press was suppressed eight days after it had been passed, on receipt of the tidings of Cromwell's massacre at Drogheda. Until Cromwell's return to England in 1650, all that the new licensers could do was each of them to write or supervise a journal, and by the time of that return all the unlicensed Royalist mercuries had at last been stamped out.

Finally, on August 28, 1655, Cromwell's "Printing and Printers" Ordinance was issued. This at once touched the high water mark of oppression of the Press by adding the lash as a penalty. All the Orders, Ordinances and Acts preceding it were confirmed by it, and three Commissioners were appointed to put them into execution. They were John Barkstead, Lieutenant of the Tower (formerly a Strand thimble-maker) and Alderman John Dethick and George Foxcroft, of whom we know nothing. Power was given to these men and to their deputies to commit to Bridewell for "corporal and pecuniary punishment" all persons offending, and no one was to print any "pamphlets, books of news, occurrences or other such like paper whatsoever" unless authorized by Cromwell or his Council. No such authorization was ever given, so that a third suppression of the Press followed this Ordinance—the bi-weekly official organ being licensed by Thurloe, Cromwell's Secretary.

Cromwell died on September 3, 1658, and when the Rump returned to power in May of the following year it at once restored freedom to the licensed press.

"I shall observe to the reader the happiness of a Commonwealth, even in this one instance of the liberty of printing, that our mouths are open," remarked a pamphleteer (23). "For it suits not with the interest nor with the magnanimity of a true Commonwealth to stop the Press. This is a thing for the petty and peddling way of princes that are afraid of everything and whose ravenous hangbys must screw money out of the weekly intelligence. For," he went on, "Let me tell you, countrymen, that whenever you see a restriction upon the Press, then know that your hoped for Commonwealth is taking its leave and base selfish designs and interests are getting head again."

Unfortunately, when the Rump returned to power once more, and for the last time, at the end of December, 1659, the Press was again suppressed. This suppression was continued at the King's return in May, 1660, books and periodicals alike being authorized by the exercise of the Royal Prerogative until 1662, when the last "Printing Act" was passed (usually misdescribed as the "Licensing Act"). This Act practically re-enacted in a milder and modified form the effect of the previous legislation, in addition to restricting the number of presses.

The measure was called for by the printers rather than the booksellers, and the only objection made to it seems to have been the complaint by the printers that the booksellers (i.e., the Stationers' Company) were not the proper persons to have control (24). They should themselves be a Company, they contended. By this Act presses were authorised at Oxford, at Cambridge, and at York, as well as those in London.

(23) "Margery Goodcow . . ., or, a short discourse shewing that there is not a farthing due from this nation to old Oliver for all his pretended services." May 3, 1659. Thomason tract. E. 984 (9).

(24) See "The Printers Lamentation; or, The Press Opprest and Overprest" (1660) calling also for a reduction in the number of presses (!), and Richard Atkyns' "Original and Growth of Printing" (1664). This last tract amounts to a plea in favour of the Royal Prerogative, in lieu of the Printing Act. Nothing is more remarkable in all the printers' petitions, from 1640 to 1663, than the wish for a reduction in the number of presses, chiefly because the bad printing of the time was due to the great number in existence. "The Printers Lamentation" terms the Star Chamber Decree of 1637, "the best and most exquisite Form and Constitution for the good Government and regulation of the Press that was ever pronounced."

THE TITUS OATES PRESS.

The unlicensed periodicals published at the time of Titus Oates's Popish Plot deserve a greater amount of attention than they have received. They are very numerous, extend from 1679 to 1682, and the attempt made by the King to suppress them by Royal Proclamation was not at first successful. To these papers the printers' addresses have been added in order to aid identification. A very valuable companion to them and guide to many of the prosecutions which took place at this time will be found in the late W. H. Hart's "Index Expurgatorius Anglicanus." It is much to be regretted that this work has not been carried on to modern times.

QUALIFIED FREEDOM IN 1695.

Five years after the Revolution, in 1695, the Printing Act of 1662 expired for the last time and was not renewed. No further claim was made to the Royal Prerogative in the publication of news, nor were any more licensers of any kind appointed. Probably this was occasioned by much of the Royal power passing into the hands of Parliament, as one of the results of the Revolution. But the Press was still regarded with suspicion. Reports of proceedings in Parliament had been forbidden in June, 1660, and many years were to elapse before the ban was removed, although it was always being infringed. And the Stamp Acts constituted a heavy handicap on the periodical press, from which the newspapers did not recover until the middle of the nineteenth century. But with the passing of the power of Parliament into the hands of the people, the liberty of the Press has at last been assured. "Government" is nowadays a matter in which all are concerned. No longer is it the affair of a party or caste, and James I's proclamation against excess of speech "in matters of State" would be the wildest absurdity in our own times.

The following Bibliography of the English Press has been compiled, partly in order to set before the reader a panoramic view of the origin and growth of English Newspapers, and partly in order to provide the research worker with the means of ascertaining what periodicals were printed at any given time. At present, unless the name of a periodical is known, it is often impossible to trace the events it describes; but with the following list the inquirer will be able to utilize new, and, very often, completely forgotten, sources of information.

THE COLLECTIONS CATALOGUED.

By the Copyright Act of 1842, and subsequent Acts, a copy of each periodical published must be deposited at the British Museum. The present list, therefore, is based upon the collections at the Museum, which are divided into two main sections: (a) Periodicals in the main library, comprising the magazines and reviews, as well as some of the older papers; and (b) Newspapers, &c., in the Newspaper Room. Unless otherwise stated, all the newspapers, magazines, &c., in the following list will be found under the headings of "Periodical Publications," or "Newspapers," at the British Museum.

The Museum, however, contains two great historical collections in addition to the main divisions; and, when these are referred to, the periodical in question has been marked "Thomason" or "Burney" as the case may be. The Thomason Collection extends from 1641 to about 1660; and, in addition to the newsbooks, contains nearly all the pamphlet literature of the time. It is, therefore, quite unique, and has been separately described in the "Catalogue of the Thomason Tracts," to which a biography of the contemporary bookseller, George Thomason, has been prefixed. The Burney Collection was formed by the celebrated classical scholar, Dr. Charles Burney (see Life in Dictionary of National Biography), and extends from the earliest times to the year 1817. This valuable collection is to be found in the Newspaper Room. It is much to be hoped that the necessary funds and staff may be provided, so that a catalogue of this Collection may be printed. Dr. Burney's own manuscript catalogue, however, can be consulted. Other collections noticed, such as those in the Bodleian Library, at Oxford, have also been the subject of a separate reference at the end of each item.

In no case has a conjectural date been given to a periodical, even when the numeration plainly proves that it commenced before the year under which it has been placed. In each case the reference is to actual periodicals (dates and numbers) still to be seen. As a rule, the last date assigned marks the date of discontinuance, and, except in the case of the seventeenth and eighteenth century periodicals, which have been the subject of considerable research, the bulk of the data have been taken from the British Museum catalogues. These, of course, are subject to continual revision. By the time this bibliography arrives in the readers' hands, many of the papers will have been discontinued and many new ones entered.

It has not been found possible to include in this list the official periodicals (not yet accessible to the public) printed during the war.

Finally, three classes of periodicals have been excluded: (1) Annuals and year-books; (2) Periodicals classed under the heading "Academies," &c., such as the various "Archæologia" and journals of Royal Societies, &c.; and (3) Local church magazines, usually printed at a common centre and with a very limited appeal.

The list is believed to be practically exhaustive as regards the seventeenth and nineteenth centuries. The eighteenth-century list, however, is far from complete. The by-ways of research have been so numerous, and so frequently have ended in blind alleys, that it has not been possible to trace several periodicals known to have existed, and many of the existing sets noticed are very imperfect. Two causes seem to have powerfully contributed to the loss of many eighteenth-century papers and pamphlets. The first is the somewhat unaccountable neglect with which they were treated, and the second the maleficent results of the Stamp Acts. There seems to have been a craze for collecting the stamps, with the result of either mutilation or loss of many periodicals. It is to be regretted that this mania still continues, and it is hoped that philatelists worthy of the name will discourage a practice of mutilating documents which has been known to extend even to indentures and other evidences of title, when these have not been in the custody of the family lawyer.

The special facilities granted by Mr. A. W. Pollard and the authorities at the British Museum have greatly contributed to lessen the labour of the task of indexing the periodicals. And special thanks are due to all the librarians of the various local libraries noted in the list. Without their interest and co-operation much information would have been lacking.

TABLE OF OBSOLETE PRESS LAWS.

1. June 23, 1586. Decrees of the Star Chamber. These Decrees were printed by Strype in his "Life of Archbishop Whitgift," Appendix XXIV. to Book III., Chapter 13. Two other versions are to be found in the State Papers, Domestic Series, Elizabeth, one in Vol. 178, No. 48, dated June 23, 1584, and the other in Vol. 190, Nos. 48-49, dated June 23, 1586. They are noted on pp. 184 and 336 respectively of the Calendar for 1581-1590. Apparently, the last version was their final form.

2. July 11, 1637. Decree of the Star Chamber. This was printed at the time and is reprinted in the fourth volume of Arber's Transcript of the Registers of the Company of Stationers.

NOTE.—The Star Chamber was abolished as from August 1, 1641, by statute, 16 Car. I.c. 10. (See the Statutes at Large.)

LEGISLATION OF THE LONG PARLIAMENT AND DURING THE INTERREGNUM.

NOTE.—The whole of the following Ordinances, &c., were in full force up to the date of the Restoration in 1660. They then became void, as they lacked Royal and, after 1648, even Parliamentary, sanction.

3. March 9, 1642. Ordinance for seizure of unlicensed pamphlets and presses. (Set out in Fairfax's Warrant, infra No. 9.)

4. March 13, 1642. Ordinance directing the following stationers to put the preceding Order into execution : Felix Kingston, Samuel Man, George Miller, John Bellamy, William Lee, junior, John Partridge, Christopher Meredith, Robert Dawlman, Matthew Walbanck, Richard Coats, Joseph Hunscot and John Raworth. (Set out in Fairfax's Warrant, infra No. 9.)

5. June 14, 1643. Ordinance directing all books, pamphlets, papers, &c., to be licensed. (Set out in Fairfax's Warrant, infra No. 9.) Printed also in Henry Scobell's "Collection of Acts and Ordinances" (1658) and in Firth and Rait's "Acts and Ordinances of the Interregnum" (1911.)

6. June 20, 1643. Ordinance promulgating the names of licensers, in virtue of the Ordinance of June 14th. (Set out under latter date in Firth and Rait.)

7. October 9, 1643. Act of Common Council of the City of London, suppressing hawkers. (Only to be seen in Fairfax's Warrant, infra No. 9.)

8. September 28, 1647. Ordinance regulating printers and printing. (Set out in Fairfax's Warrant, infra No. 9 ; in William Hughes's "An Exact Abridgement of Publick Acts of Parliament from 1640 to the year 1656" (1657) ; in Scobell (ut supra) and in Firth and Rait (ut supra).

9. January 11, 1649. Warrant of Fairfax to Richard Lawrence, Marshal-General of his Army, setting out and directing him to put into execution the following Ordinances (a) Sept. 28, 1647 ; (b) June 14, 1643 ; (c) March 9, 1642 ; (d) March 13, 1642, and (e) Oct. 9, 1643, Act of Common Council. (This warrant is Thomason tract E 538 (1).)

10. September 10, 1649. Printing and printers "Act," in force until 29 Sept., 1651. (Set out in Hughes, Scobell's and Firth and Rait's works.)

11. January 7, 1653. Second Printing and Printers "Act," reviving also that of Sept. 20, 1649. (Set out in Hughes, Scobell's and Firth and Rait's works.)

12. August 28, 1655. Printing and Printers "Ordinance" of Cromwell and his Council. (Only to be seen in the original version. Thomason tract E 1064 (58) and in William Hughes's "Exact abridgment of Publick Acts of Parliament from 1640 to the year 1656.")

13. June 10, 1662. 13 and 14 Car. II. c. 33. Printing and Printers Act. In force for two years, but re-enacted up to May, 1679. Re-enacted again in June, 1684, and renewed until June, 1695. (Statutes at Large.)

14. 10 Anne. c. 19. The First Stamp Act. (Statutes at Large.)

(For modern Press Laws the reader is referred to Fisher and Strachan's "Law of the Press," "Copinger on Copyright," and similar standard works.)

With similar variations as to the titles and the publishers, the following numbers are in the Burney Collection:—"June 16, Numb. 36"; "July 4, Numb. 38"; "July 10, 1623. Numb. 39"; "July 18, Numb. 40"; "July 22, Numb. 41"; "July 29, Numb. 42"; "August 21, Numb. 44"; "Aug. 27, Numb. 45"; "August 29, Number 46. Ital. Gazet. Nu. prio."; September 5, Numb. 46"; "September 12, Numb. 47"; "September 17. Numb. 48"; "September 24, Number 49"; and "October 2, Number 50."

On Oct. 11 this periodical recommences with "Number 1." The second number appearing on Oct. 28, and the third on Nov. 11. The last number of this series in the collection is No. 30 for 17 May, 1624, and the titles and publishers continue to vary throughout.

For 1624 this periodical was continued with the same variations of title and different publishers, No. 9 appearing on 11 Jan. (the earlier numbers are missing).

1625.

Januar 5. Numb. 2. The continuation of our Weekly Newes from the 30 of December to the 5 of January. . . .
London. Printed for Mercurius Britannicus, 1625. (Burney.)

Note.—This series extended to No. 23 (at least), issued on May 24. "Mercurius Britannicus" seems to have been Thomas Archer, who lived in Pope's Head Alley. No. 6, for 1st. Feb., 1625-26, contains the first advertisement. "Mercurius Britannicus" is mentioned in Jonson's "Staple of Newes." His author seems to have been Captain Francis Gainsford.

"Captain Pamphlets horse and foot that sally
Upon the Exchange, out of Pope's Head Alley
The weekly corrants with Pauls seal and all
The admired discourses of the prophet Ball."
(Jonson. "An Execration upon Vulcan.")

From 1625 to 1632 the "corantos" continued to appear, Butter and Bourne jointly publishing the majority of them. they, however, diminished in number. See No. 9 for 16 July, 1630. The Rev. William Wats, of Caius College, was the translator of more than forty of them, containing accounts of the wars between Gustavus Adolphus and the Germans.

On 17 Oct., 1632, the Star Chamber prohibited the printing of all "gazetts" and news from foreign parts, "as well Butter's and Bourne's as others." Butter and Bourne, nevertheless, were permitted to issue half-yearly volumes, under the title of the "Swedish Intelligencer, &c." Part 1. 1632 (pp. 128). Part 2. 1632 (pp. 240). Part 3. 1633 (pp. 174). Part 4. 1633 (pp. 174). The "German History" and "Diatelesma, The Modern History of the World," &c., followed, in sections, up to 1639, inclusive, and all are catalogued under the (assumed) initials of their translator, "N.C." This writer appears to have been Sir Thos. Roe (Rowe), Ambassador Extraordinary to Hamburg. But in 1638, by Letters Patent, Butter and Bourne received the sole privilege of publishing foreign news and recommenced their corantos. The first number of their periodical was a book of twelve sheets in quarto (ninety-six pages). The title page runs:—
Number 1. An abstract of some speciall Forreigne Occurrences brought down to the weekly newes of the 20 of December; or, the severall passages and novels which have happened in Germany, France, Spaine, Italy and other places some few months since. London. Printed for Nathaniel Butter and Nicholas Bourne. By permission. 1638. (Burney.) The preface to this volume states:
The Currantiers to the Readers.

Gentle readers. This intelligencer, the Curranto, having been long silenced, and now permitted by authority to speake again, presents you here at first with such things as passed some months since, not because we conceive that they are absolutely Novels unto you, but first because there is fraud in generalities, we thought fit to acquaint you with each particular; and secondly, that by these antecedents you may the better understand the Consequents, which wee shall now publish weekely as heretofore.

The newsbooks, diurnalls, mercurii, &c.

Note.—These were pamphlets, at first of one sheet in quarto (8 pages); but, later on, of two sheets in quarto (16 pages), never more; and were cried in the street by the hawkers, or "mercuries," as "books." They were sold at the price of a penny a sheet, or about fourpence in our money.

The following two volumes preceded the newsbooks:

Speeches and Passages of this Great and happy Parliament. From the third of November 1640 to this instant June 1641. Collected into one volume and according to the most perfect originalls exactly published, London. Printed for William Cooke and are to be sold at his shop at Furnifall's-Inne gate in Holbourne, 1641. (534pp. quarto). (Burney.)

The Diurnall Occurrences; or Dayly Proceedings of Both Houses, in this Great and Happy Parliaiment. From the third of November 1640 to the third of November 1641. With a continuation of all the Speeches from June last, to the third of November, 1641. (410pp. quarto. Same imprint. Burney.)

Note.—From 1641 to 1660 the periodicals catalogued can be best seen in the Thomason Collection. Large numbers are missing in the Burney and other collections.

The Heads of severall Proceedings in the Present Parliament (from the 22 of November to the 29, 1641) Wherein is contained the substance of severall letters sent from Ireland shewing what distresses and misery they are in. With divers other passages of moment touching the affaires of these kingdomes. No. 1. Nov. 22-29. 1641. London. Printed for I.T.

Note.—This was the first weekly periodical of domestic news. The synopsis of contents differed in Nos. 2 and 3. With No. 4 this became Diurnall Occurrences; or, the Heads of Severall Proceedings in both Houses of Parliament. Dec. 13-20, 1641. Printed for J.T. and T.B.

A Perfect Diurnall of the passages in Parliament. . . . More fully and exactly taken than by any other printed copies as you will finde upon comparing. . . . No. 13. 5-12 Sept. 1642. Printed for Francis Coules. (This appears to be the older Perfect Diurnall, altered by the addition of a rough woodcut of the House of Commons in session.)

A true and Perfect Diurnall of all the chiefe Passages in Lancashire. . . . sent to five shopkeepers in London from a friend. No. 1. 3-19 July, 1642. Printed for T.U.

A Perfect Diurnall of the Passages in Parliament. No. 1. 11-18 July, 1642. Printed for Robert Williams. Signed Hen. Elsing (Clerk to the House of Commons).

A Perfect Diurnall; or, the Proceedings in Parliament No. 1. 11-19 July (no imprint); and ibid. No. 1. 18-25 July, the latter printed for John Thomas, as well as a third of the latter date, also No. 1., but printed for J. G. and R. W., appear to be competing counterfeits of the original "Perfect Diurnall"; no property in the newspaper title being, as yet, acknowledged.

A Diurnall and Particula (r) of the last Weekes Daily Occurrents from his Majesty in severall places. No. 1. July 10-26, 1642. Printed by T.F. for D.C.

A True and Perfect Diurnall of the passages in Parliament No. 11. 29 Aug.-6 Sept. 1642. Printed by H. Blundell.

A Perfect Diurnall of the passages in Parliament No. 7. 25 July-1 Aug. 1642. Printed for John Jonson.

Some Speciall Passages (from Hull, London, &c.) No. 10. 1 Aug., 1642. Printed for R.O. and G.D

A Continuation of Certaine speciall and Remarkable Passages. No. 1. 10-14 Oct. 1642. Printed for Marke Wallace. And, Ibid. 12-18 Nov. Printed for John White.

Note.—With rare exceptions all the above periodicals were issued on Mondays, in time for the weekly post to the country on the following day. The majority appear to have been counterfeits. The "ordinances" of Parliament in 1643, setting up a board of licencers of pamphlets swept away these counterfeits and brought about order and the recognition of the newspaper title, or "catchword," as the property of the writer (not the publisher) of a periodical.

Mercurius Melancholicus; or, Newes from Westminster and other parts. (No. 1. By the Rev. John Hackluyt, D.D., is only to be seen in the Burney Collection. The Thomason Collection commences with No. 3.)

Note.— The Royalist Mercuries bore no imprints, other than obviously fictitious ones, such as "Printed at the sign of 'You may goe looke'" and the like. In the case of two of the leading Royalist Mercuries, "Melancholicus" and "Pragmaticus," there were numerous counterfeits, only to be distinguished by comparing the numbers in one collection with the numbers of even date in another. "Melancholicus" was claimed as his own and chiefly written by Martin Parker, the ballad writer, and occasionally counterfeited by John Crouch, a printer. The Counterfeits of "Pragmaticus" commence in 1649, but none of their writers has yet been identified.

A Perfect Diurnall of some passages and proceedings of and in relation to the Armies. Licensed by the Secretary of the Army under his Excellency the Lord Fairfax. No. 1. 10-17 Dec. Printed by Edward Griffin. Until 24 Sept., 1655. (By John Rushworth at first, but by Samuel Pecke from Jan., 1650, to the end.)

Note.—The licensed Press appears to have been suppressed on 29 Sept., 1649, in consequence of Cromwell's Irish massacres; and until his return in June, 1650. The above three official journals took the place of the others, but Rushworth's claim to be Secretary to the Army was disputed by Richard Hatter, who licensed a few of the older periodicals for a fortnight. These contain valuable accounts of Cromwell's proceedings at Drogheda. Efforts to suppress the unlicensed Royalist Press were not successful until 1650.

The Oxford Gazette. No. 1. 16 November, 1665. Printed at Oxford by Leonard Litchfield, and reprinted in London by Thomas Newcome. With No. 24 for Monday, 5 Feb., 1665-6, this title was changed to

The London Gazette. Published originally on Mondays and Thursdays, the Gazette is still a bi-weekly, published now on Tuesdays and Fridays, and is the oldest existing European newspaper. A large number of supplements have marked its career. During the seventeenth century these are difficult to identify, owing to their having no other heading than that of the place where the Court was for the time being—e.g., Windsor, Hampton Court, etc. A French edition of the Gazette was also published, M. de Moranville being the first translator, but copies of this translation are very rare in England. In modern times the Gazette has been confined to official news, but this was by no means the case in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. From 1665 to 1679 it was practically the only English newspaper, and at first was "half a sheet in folio." The Gazette was founded by Henry Muddiman, the last number written by this journalist being No. 25, for 8 Feb., 1666, after which he abandoned the periodical, owing to a quarrel with Sir Joseph Williamson, then Under Secretary of State, and attached himself to Secretary of State Sir William Morice. Charles Perrot was Muddiman's successor.

Publick Intelligence. With sole Privilege. No. 1. 29 Nov., 1665. Printed by R. Hodgkinson. (By Sir Roger L'Estrange.) This solitary number was an attempt to compete with the Gazette. (Burney.)

Note on the Royal Prerogative in the publication of news:

'Whitehall. May 5. This day the Judges made their report to His Majesty in Council (in pursuance of an order of this Board) by which they unanimously declare, That His Majesty may by Law prohibit the Printing and Publishing of all News-Books and Pamphlets of News whatsoever, not licensed by His Majesty's Authority, as manifestly tending to the Breach of the Peace, and disturbance of the Kingdom. Whereupon His Majesty was pleased to direct a Proclamation to be prepared for the Restraining the Printing of News-Books and Pamphlets of News without leave.' The London Gazette. No. 1509. May 3-6, 1680.

PROCLAMATION.

"Charles R. Whereas it is of great importance to the State. That all News Printed and Published to the People, as well concerning Foreign as Domestick Affairs, should be agreeable to Truth, or at least Warranted by good Intelligence, that the minds of His Majesties Subjects may not be disturbed or amused by Lyes or vain Reports, which are many times raised on purpose to Scandalize the Government or for other indirect ends: And Whereas of late many Evil-disposed Persons have made it a common Practice to Print and Publish Pamphlets of News, without licence or authority, and therein have vended to His Majesties People all the idle and malicious Reports that they could Collect or Invent, contrary to Law; The continuance whereof would in a short time endanger the Peace of the Kingdom, the same manifestly tending thereto, as has been declared by all His Majesties Judges unanimously: His Majesty therefore considering the great Mischief that may ensue upon such Licentious and Illegal Practices, if not timely prevented, hath thought fit by this His Royal Proclamation (with the advice of His Privy Council) strictly to Prohibit and Forbid all Persons whatsoever to Print or Publish any News-Books or Pamphlets of News not Licensed by His Majesties Authority. And to the intent all Offenders may know their Danger, and desist from any further Proceedings of this kind, His Majesty is Graciously pleased hereby to Declare, that they shall be Proceeded against according to the utmost severity of the Law; And for that purpose His Majesty doth hereby Will and Command all His Judges, Justices of Peace, and all other His Officers and Ministers of Justice whatsoever, That they take effectual Care, that all such as shall Offend in the Premises, be Proceeded against and Punished according to their Demerits." Tercentenary Handlist of English and Welsh Newspapers, Magazines and Reviews.

SECTION II.—THE PROVINCIAL PRESS

INTRODUCTION.

IT was not possible for local "newsbooks" or "papers" to be published until printing-presses had been permanently set up in country towns; and even when printing-presses were moved from place to place, as in the case of both armies during the Civil Wars, no sort of periodical seems to have been the result in England, though one was published in Scotland and another in Ireland.

The Press at Oxford produced three mercuries in the seventeenth century, "Mercurius Aulicus," "Mercurius Rusticus" and "Mercurius Academicus," and these have been placed in section 1 with the other mercuries of the Civil Wars. The "Oxford Gazette" of 1665 so soon became the "London Gazette" and was so little the product of Oxford that it also has been placed in Section I. Other than these four periodicals no "newsbook" or "paper" is known to have been published in the provinces in the seventeenth century.

It has been supposed that country newspapers would naturally commence directly the Printing Act of 1662 lapsed in 1695. But the list proves that so few newspapers appeared in London that such a result in the country was improbable, until the metropolitan Press was on a firmer footing in the following century.

The first country paper appears to have been published at Norwich. Printing in Norwich owed its origin to the emigrants from the Low Countries in 1565, to whom the city is so much indebted for the art of weaving, &c. Anthony de Solempne was the first of these early printers, and published books at Norwich as early as 1570. Edward Giles has been stated to have been the next, but probably only published books printed in London (see "The Weekly Pacquet of Advice from Germany," of 1679, in Section I.).

Finally, Francis Burges set up in business in a house near the Red Well and, in 1701, published a tract entitled "Some observations on the Use and Origin of the Noble Art and Mystery of Printing." In his introduction to this tract Burges claimed to be the first to set up a printing-press in Norwich, pointed out that he could obtain paper from the mills at Tabram and that this tract, published on "Saturday, Sept. 27, 1701," was "the first book that was ever printed and published here." He was evidently ignorant of Anthony de Solempne. On August 1, 1706, Dr. Thos. Tanner, afterwards Bishop of St. Asaph, then Rector of Thorpe Bishop's, Norwich, wrote to Browne Willis, the Bucks Antiquary, as follows:—

"The Norwich newspapers are the principal support of our poor printer here, by which, with the advertisements, he clears near 50s. every week, selling vast numbers to the country people. As far as I can learn, this Burges first began here the printing of news out of London, since I have seen the Bristol Postman, and I am told they print also a weekly paper at Exeter."*

Five numbers at least of Burges's paper are in existence, of which the earliest is that in the Harleian MSS. numbered "348," for April 24—May 1, 1708, and entitled the "Norwich Post." The printer of this was Elizabeth

* See the third of Mr. W. H. Allnutt's articles on "English Provincial Presses," in Bibliographica, Vol. II., pp. 294-308. Since "first began here the printing of news out of London" is capable of two constructions, it should be noticed that there was no other paper in existence at Norwich at the date of this letter. The Norwich Gazette did not commence until later. So Dr. Tanner meant that Burges was the first country printer to print a newspaper and that he printed that newspaper at Norwich.

Burges, the widow of Francis, who died at the commencement of that year. Therefore, if the numeration can be trusted, No. 1 of the "Norwich Post" was printed in September, 1701, and according to Dr. Tanner was the first paper printed out of London. The "Bristol Post-Boy" (not Post-Man) seems to have been commenced by William Bonny in November, 1702. The Exeter paper mentioned by Bishop Tanner has not been traced, but "Jos Bliss's Exeter Post-Boy" is represented by a solitary number in the Burney Collection, No. 211 for May 4, 1711. If Dr. Tanner's statement is accurate, Bliss or another printer must have first issued some other paper in 1706, or earlier. But this, with many other questions suggested by the incomplete list appended, awaits solution by local antiquaries.

Three causes seem to have contributed powerfully to set on foot the country Press. First, the Jacobite party was very strong in the country, and many of the early country papers made no secret of their sympathies in this direction. Secondly, the commencement of the London daily papers, with the "Daily Courant" of 1702, added very much to the cost of subscription to a London paper; and, thirdly, the Stamp Acts, by increasing the price in the country of London papers (already surcharged with by no means light postal dues) rendered it easier for the weekly country Press to cater for local farmers and people of limited means. The newspapers in country towns are still invariably issued on "market days."

Local news at first entered into the contents of a country paper to a very small extent, for the first editors were always the printers themselves, and compiled their papers from the London newspapers and (more particularly) the newsletters. The letters of Dyer, Fox, Johnson, Delpouch, Wye, Jones, Dormer, and many another forgotten newsletter writer will continually be found quoted in the earlier country papers as authorities for news; and, for this reason, it is still worth while to read these older country periodicals, for very few newsletters have survived. It is a step in advance to ascertain their writers' names. Nowadays, with the daily London papers and the daily papers of great provincial centres such as Liverpool, Manchester, and the like, penetrating everywhere, the minor country papers depend chiefly upon local news.

In conclusion, the hope may be expressed that readers who are aware of any early eighteenth century periodicals not noticed in the following list will contribute particulars of them to "Notes and Queries," in order that their facts may be available for future research workers in the history of the provincial Press. Only by a combination of efforts of this kind can the many questions suggested be satisfactorily cleared up.
